POETRY.

THE NEW YEAR'S NIGHT.

I stood at the door of the festive room
Where was mainly grace and beauty's bloom,
All looked splendid, and dazling gay,
As they danced the joyous hours away;
And every face wore a smile so bright,
And every step was so quick and light,
That it seem'd as they'd made a league with Care
That none of her children should enter there.

I will not say, that the tranquil brow
Conceal'd no vexing thoughts below,
That the sunny smile, and the sparkling glance,
That lighted and gilded the mazy dance,
Were the radiant beams of spirits blest,
Or the genuine gleamings of hearts at rest;
Bright glitters the scene when Pleasure's wand
Is waid in her jewel-cover'd hand;
But peace sheds a softer and steadier glow,
A liberal, calm and translucent flow,
Which, nor music, nor mirth, nor wine bestow.
Swiftly and gaily the minutes pass,
And they started to hear the bell count two.
As died on their ears the unwelcome chime,
They reproach'd the heedless speed of time;
'Who ought,' they said, 'to have pause'd in his flight,
To prolong the mirth of the New Year's night,
But cruel still, as in former years,
He grants no boon, he hears no prayers.'

'I grant no boon, I regard no prayers,'
Replied a voice from the upper air;
Breathless they stood, in severe surprise,
When upward they turn'd their enquiring eyes,
And beheld old Time o'er the glittering rings,
Waving his ever changeable wings;
But ere the air cleft with the passing stroke,
In solemn tone, these words he spoke;

'The idle breath of the children of men,
In chidings or prayers to me is vain,
I put it by with my pilous wide,
In my forward course, as I ceaseless glide;
Alike to me the prayers of plebeians,
Of dying sinners, or living saints;
From my eye of fire no tear ever steals,
My heart of stone no repentance feels,

Wealth sought to bribe my lengthened stay,
But I look'd on his heaps, and they melted away;
Power thought to bind me to his great throne,
But I touch'd the mass, and it crumbled down;
Bright Beauty would me to spare her soft form,
But I left her to banquet her sister worm;
And nought have I left in gay Pleasure's powers,
Save the wither'd leaves, and the faded flowers;
And in the wide halls where her flambeaux gleam'd,
Hath my raven croak'd and my bittren scream'd.'

Young Genius sued for an amaranth wreath,
And I gave him the shroud and the pall of death;
Fame blew her loud trumpet, and spread her roll,
But I broke the brass, and consumed the scroll;
And ever, when Earth's Babel-building bands,
Heap high their towers, & their glittering sands,
I stretch my hand out over the main,
And my wide wave levels them all again!

But I may not pause—for 'a mighty one,'
His feet are fire, 'His face as the Sun,'
And 'cloth'd with a cloud,' from 'Heav'n comes down.'

His head adorn'd 'with a rainbow crown,
With an 'open book' in his ample hand,
On the earth and sea he shall equal stand,
His rending voice shall silence break,
And 'seven deep thunders' their echoes wake!
Then lifting his hand up to heav'n, he—
'By him who made heaven, and earth, and sea,
Shall swear that I shall no longer be.

THE PHYSICIAN'S FEE.

BY CHARLES P. ILSLEY.

(Concluded.)

CHAPTER III.

TRULY is it more blessed to give than to receive, when the object of our charity is known to be deserving. Young Herbert felt it to be so on his return home. He knew that his patient was poor, for every thing he saw spoke of extreme poverty;...the humble dwelling...the scant furniture...the incoherent expression of the sick woman, and if these were not enough, the purse with its few bits of copper & silver; and he knew she was worthy. The neatness and order of the room...the demeanor of the daughter...every thing around & about them convinced him that his gift was well bestowed. What argument he found for this conclusion in the brilliant charms of Ellen...and they never shone so conspicuously as in her assiduous attention to her poor mother—is not for us to say. Suffice it, that when young Herbert laid his head upon his pillow, he felt more satisfied with his generous performance than if he had received a good fat fee from a purse-proud patient.

But how shall we describe the emotion of Ellen on learning the contents of the pretended receipt? It would be difficult to paint them in all their variations. How deep was her intense delight at the unexpected treasure coming in this, her sorest need; and then came other feelings. Should she accept this gift...from an entire stranger, too? Would it be proper? But had she a right to reject it? Was it not intended for her mother as well as herself? These and a thousand similar questions she put to herself, without, however, being able to solve them to her satisfaction. Never before did she so much desire her mother's counsel and advice. But when she thought over the situation in which she was placed, with no possibility of earning any thing by her own hands so long as her parent continued sick; when she thought of the extra expenses that must necessarily be incurred to provide articles for a sick room; and when she remembered, too, that she had not funds enough of her own to procure more than a week's provisions, small as were her wants—she decided at once to accept the gift.

We shall not attempt to analyze poor Ellen's feelings, as she sat that night by her mother's bedside, watching her uneasy slumbers. She thought—as it was natural that she should—much of her benefactor, but not in the light of a benefactor solely. There was an under-current of feeling, as she dwelt upon his personal appearance...his fine manly form...his expressive countenance, and his sympathetic tones, which she did not attempt to fathom. She suffered the stream to flow on in its seductive brightness, without questioning its source or destination. Thus she passed a sleepless, but not a wearisome night.

In the morning her mother's symptoms appeared much more favorable. Though wandering at times, she did not exhibit those distressing tokens which so alarmed Ellen the evening previous. It was with no small anxiety that she now awaited the expected visit of the physician. She listened with a throbbing heart to every approaching footstep—fearing, yet desiring, his presence. How should she acknowledge his donation...how express her gratitude? Should she be silent respecting it, or should she represent to him the true state of the case, and inform him that she should consider his gift a loan, until she should be able to repay it? This last she struck her the most favorably, and she resolved to be governed by it. She had scarcely arrived at this conclusion, when a chaise rattled up to the door. Presently footsteps were heard on the stairs. She started, and the blood flushed her cheeks as some one rapped at the door. She opened it, and the young physician entered. He, too, was slightly embarrassed. Hastily paying his respects, he approached the bed, and enquired after his patient.

'My mother rested exceedingly well last night,' said Ellen, 'and appears much better this morning—do you not think so sir?' 'Why—yes—there is a surprising change!' said Herbert, as he felt Mrs. Lemand's pulse. I could not desire a more favorable case. But she requires great care and attention. Have you no friend, Miss Lemand, to assist you in the arduous duties of the sick chamber?

'I once had not, Mr. Herbert; for the poor—those who most need the blessing of friendship—are generally deprived of it. When we were in prosperity, we reckoned friends; but when adversity came upon us, friendship took her departure.'

'It is a bitter lesson we all must sooner or later learn,' said Herbert, 'I was early taught it. When I most desired friends, I found them not; but when I needed not their aid, then they crowded around me. You said you once had no friend; have you been so fortunate as to secure one, Miss Lemand.'

Ellen felt her cheek glow at this question. She hesitated a moment before replying; then with a throbbing heart, and a slightly trembling voice, she said—'He who remembers the widow in her affliction...who feels it is more blessed to give than to receive—has proved himself a friend, indeed!' and she fixed her gaze earnestly on the young physician.

He started at this delicate acknowledgement, and taking Ellen's hand, with some warmth replied, 'Miss Lemand, I will not pretend to misunderstand you. I thank God, who has given me the power, as well as the will, to do an act of kindness. But the trifle I left last evening must not be alluded to. We must be better friends—become better acquainted. You were not always as you now appear...you have seen better days. Am I too bold in thus seeking your confidence?'

Charles Herbert was a man of generous impulse. He walked through the world with a warmer heart, and had a more exalted opinion of human nature than most men. He was enthusiastic in his attachments. When once the fountain of feeling was stirred, it generally overflowed. Left in early life an orphan, he had struggled unaided—buffeted the waves with a strong arm and determined heart. He entered on the study of medicine with barely a change of raiment—a poor student thirsting after knowledge. He overcame difficulties under which others would have sunk. He bore up against trials which would have crushed a less determined man. The elements of greatness were implanted in his nature, and all the array of adverse circumstances could not subdue them. His career was upward and onward, as will be the course of all those who have fixed an eye on the goal, resolved to win it. He was now, at an early age, in the enjoyment of the confidence of a numerous & wealthy class, reaping the harvest of his early sufferings. He ranked high as a young physician, and every day was adding new strength to his claims. Such was Charles Herbert; and, with this brief exposition of his character, the reader will not be surprised at his address to Ellen, and the sudden proffer of his friendship. With such a cast of mind, the barriers of restraint are soon broken down; and though Ellen shrank with an instinctive delicacy from entering at once into a narration of her past history, she could not reject his friendly overture.

CHAPTER IV.

The winter months had passed away. Spring had come with her train of flowers and choir of singing birds, and nature was decked in her beautiful garments.

It was evening; and the streets of the city were thronged with a gay crowd, enjoying the delicious atmosphere and the rich splendor of night. Every moving thing seemed glad, and in keeping with the freshness and beauty of the season. But let us step apart from the crowd, and enter this genteel looking house. The rooms, if not richly, are handsomely furnished. Every thing gives evidence of being arranged by the hand of taste. Its occupants consist of two females. One, a middle-aged lady, bearing the marks of recent illness, reclines on a sofa; the other, a beautiful girl of about nineteen, whose simple white dress sets off a form of exquisite proportions, is seated at a neat work-table, reading aloud in tones exceedingly rich and clear. The picture is one of pure, unadulterated comfort; and were it not for the lines on the brow of the elder...those leger-lines of care and suffering—one would suppose that sorrow had never shaded so fair and bright a scene.

'It is a sad story, mother,' said the young lady, as she finished and laid aside the book, 'and it bears a painful similitude to our own dark history.'

'Without its happy termination, Ellen,' replied the mother, 'Perhaps, if there had been a good physician night, the story would have not closed so darkly,' and Mrs. Lemand fixed her eyes with an arch meaning on her daughter. A smile and a sigh struggled on the lips of Ellen.

'Our obligations to Mr. Herbert are many and great,' said she, while a faint blush stole over her features. 'Had it not been for him, we might still have been the occupants of a hovel, and dependant on the precarious means by which we so lately were supported.'

'You have often heard, my daughter, that God never resorts to ordinary means to accomplish His ends, and that He often causes good to spring from what we in our finite judgment, call an evil. Instance my late sickness. To that we are indebted for the acquaintance of Charles Herbert—by him we learned the existence of that letter, the receipt of which has worked the change in our situation.'

'True,' said Ellen, 'but we might have received the letter without the doctor's aid.'

'We might, my dear, but,' continued her mother, who never neglected an opportunity to enforce a useful lesson...I had rather ascribe the changes that have taken place to a wise Providence than to a blind chance.' And it was in this devout reliance that Mrs. Lemand found strength to bear patiently the ills of life. She had been schooled in adversity, as we have seen; but a submissive, docile spirit had shielded her in the hour of trial. 'Thy will be done,' were the magic words that buoyed her life-bark up, when tost on a tempestuous sea. It formed the burden of a favorite song of hers, written by a friend of her husband and presented to her.

When sailing o'er life's changeful sea,
Should storms my bark assail,
Oh, may I put my trust in Thee,
Whose power controls the gale;
And though opposed may be the wind,
My course but just begun,
Let this but harbor in my mind—
'Thy Will be done.'

Though waves around dash high and dark,
And burst upon its deck;
Dooming my frail and struggling bark
To early, sudden wreck;
Though cloud on cloud their form should rear,
And shroud entire Hope's sun,
Still may I say without a tear,
'Thy will be done.'

Where'er through life my path may lead,
In sunshine or in gloom;

Though thorns should every step impede—
How dark so'er my doom;
Oh never may I dare contend
Against the Holy One!
But whisper, as I lowly bend,
'Thy will be done.'

But how are we to account for this happy change in the circumstances of Mrs. Lemand? To enable the reader to understand it fully, he must go back with us to the sick chamber, which we left rather abruptly. We mentioned that Mr. Herbert took a deep interest in the welfare of the family, and made an offer of his friendship. He was one of those characters with whom one feels at home on a short acquaintance. We have all met with such in our intercourse with the world—men who win our confidence almost at first. Strangers tho' they are, the heart as it were, goes out to meet them, and by a sort of spiritual magnetism, the affections become cemented in the solid bonds of friendship.

Mrs. Lemand's sickness continued for some weeks, and her recovery was slow. In the frequent visits of Herbert—and they were not all professional—he learned the history of his patient. This knowledge added to the interest he felt for the mother and daughter; and he determined in his own mind to restore them, if possible, to their former situation. We will not say it was friendship alone that prompted him. If he had another motive, however, it will appear.

One morning, about six weeks after his introduction, he called rather early and unexpectedly. He apologized for his unwelcome visit, by stating that he hoped he was the bearer of good tidings. Mrs. Lemand, who had so far recovered as to be able to sit up, smilingly remarked—

'If your tidings are very good, as a judicious physician you will break them to us gently; for we have been so long used to adversity, that, like light to the recovered blind, sudden joy might be injurious.'

'One who can bear suffering so well need not fear such a cause,' said Herbert. 'But I am as much in the dark as yourself—here is what will solve the mystery,' and he handed Mrs. L. a packet, sealed with black, and bearing a foreign post mark. 'On looking over the papers,' continued he, 'I noticed an old advertisement, stating that there was a valuable letter in the Post Office, directed to Mrs. Ellen Lemand. I took the liberty of calling for it,—now for the mystery!'

Mrs. Lemand hastily broke the seal, and glanced over the letter. It fell from her hands, and the tears sprang to her eyes. 'This is indeed good news,—she exclaimed in an excited voice... unexpected news! Read the letter, Ellen...aloud, that I may not be mistaken—that our friend may share with us in our joy—if, indeed, I do not dream!'

Ellen took up the letter and read as follows:

Weymouth, England, January 17, 18—

MY DEAR MADAM—It becomes my duty, as executor to my lamented friend, your late uncle, William Rakeby, Esq., who died on the 30th ult., to inform you that he has, by his last will and testament, bequeathed to you the sum of £5000, as a testimony of respect for your late mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Thorndike.

'This is, indeed, good news,' said Herbert, springing from his seat and clasping a hand of the mother and daughter. 'Permit me to give you joy...heart-felt joy, on the occasion!'

The reader must imagine the feelings of Mrs. Lemand and Ellen—thus raised, as they were, from the depths of poverty to independence. The legacy was in due time received from England. Mrs. Lemand procured another residence, and with a truly grateful heart, prepared to enjoy the blessings so unexpectedly allotted her.

Physicians horses have a wonderful faculty, it is said, of remembering the houses of their master's patients. At any rate, for a long time the doctor would have to pull the off rein, when passing by the obscure street, down which the animal had daily been accustomed to trot. Nor was it long before his nag was wont to prick up his ears and pass with a brisker gait up a certain other street; for, with an instinctive sagacity, the noble beast knew that a longer call than usual was made on a certain patient, in a certain house. Indeed, at a particular hour of the day, he invariably bent his steps to that quarter. So accustomed had he been to the practice, that one day, at the usual hour, he started off on his own account with an empty chaise. When the doctor found the horse was missing, knowing, perhaps, his nature, better than the groom, he did not trouble himself about the elopement, but proceeded to call upon the aforesaid patient. There stood the animal, sure enough, at the accustomed spot, safe and sound, leisurely pawing the ground as usual. Herbert parried the joke good hu-morally played upon him by Mrs. Lemand, as he best could. It was a marvel to her, she said, that the doctor's horse should have such a liking to that particular post before the door—and she appealed to Ellen to solve the mystery.

This very act of the horse hastened an event which his master had long brooded over. When Ellen was appealed to, she left the room in some confusion. Her mother continued to banter Herbert, declaring she should not consider herself bound to pay a fee for every visit the horse took it into his head to make. She should surely protest the bill, if the doctor charged for every call.

'This is what troubles me,' said Herbert, with more caution than the occasion seemed to require,—'I fear you will not allow my charges. Yet—' and he hesitated in some confusion—'yet—madam...I will make bold to present the bill, and he seated himself at the table, and scribbled on a piece of paper as follows...

'Mrs. Ellen Lemand to Dr. Charles Herbert—Dr.

For — family visits, $ —
Received payment in full by her daughter's hand.

CHARLES HERBERT.'

'If this is allowed,' said he, as he handed Mrs. L. the paper, 'my hopes are sealed.'

She glanced her eye over it, and then with a flushed countenance, and quivering lip, took the pen and wrote on the back of the paper—

'ACCEPTED, WITH ELLEN'S CONSENT!'

And Ellen? Why, she was a dutiful child, and—ratified the bargain!

TO MAKE HOME HAPPY.—Nature is industrious in adorning her dominions; and man to whom this beauty is addressed, should feel and obey the lesson. Let him, too, be industrious in adorning his domain; in making his home; the dwelling of his wife and children; not only convenient & comfortable, but pleasant. Let him, as far as circumstances will permit, be industrious in surrounding it with pleasing objects...in decorating within and without with things that tend to make it agreeable and attractive. Let industry make home the abode of neatness and order—a place which brings satisfaction to every inmate and which in absence draws back the heart by the fond associations of comfort and content. Let this be done, and this sacred spot will become more surely the scene of cheerfulness and peace. Ye parents who would have your children happy, be industrious to bring them up in the midst of a pleasant and cheerful, a happy home. Waste not your time in accumulating wealth for them; but plant their minds and souls, in the way proposed, with the seeds of virtue and prosperity.

PRIDE.—There is nothing which more often makes the rich poor, and keeps the poor themselves so, than pride. There is no evil passion which steals into the heart more imperceptibly, which covers itself under so many disguises, or to which in fact, mankind are subject to, than this. Yet man has nothing whereof to be proud. The few advantages we possess need only be properly considered, to convince us how little we have to boast of glory in them. Say we have strength and beauty...the first is a poor qualification to boast of, since to say the least, we are herein equalled by the plodding ox and stupid ass. Besides, our strength is very uncertain and precarious. A few days sickness will cause the strongest to become as helpless as an infant.—And beauty after all, what is it? A pleasing glare of white and red, reflected by the glossy hue of the lily and daisy of the field. Even in all the pride of beauty, what is the human face? or what the human face divine? when

Worn by the slowly rolling years,
Or broke by sickness in a day,
The fading glory disappears,
The short lived beauty dies away.

When the animated spirit flies & leaves the lovely tabernacle behind, how soon does horror succeed to admiration. How do we hasten to hide from sight the loathsome remains of beauty.

There is a sort of contemptible pride...the pride of finery and dress. By this many young people, and not a few old, are carried away to the greatest extravagance. Never make yourself remarkable by unnecessary ornaments in dress.

Dr. South, visiting a gentleman one morning, was asked to stay to dinner, which invitation he accepted; the gentleman stepped into the next room and told his wife, and desired she would provide something extraordinary. Hereupon she began to murmur and scold, and made a thousand words; till at length, her husband, provoked at her behaviour, protested, that if it was not for the stranger in the next room, he would kick her out of door. Upon which the doctor, who had heard all that passed, stepped out crying, 'I beg, Sir, you will make no stranger of me.'

SPEECH.

Gentlemen, At an important crisis you have been appointed members of the Special Council, constituted by an Act of the Imperial Government; a measure which, it is admitted, I believe, had become indispensable, with reference both to the long neglected interests of Lower Canada and recent events.

The full and constant attendance of the Council during the Session, and the assiduity with which the business of the Province has been transacted will, I am persuaded, afford general satisfaction.

I return you my thanks for your attendance, and for the attention which you have devoted to the affairs which you have brought under your consideration; and I trust that the Ordinances which have been passed will essentially contribute, under existing circumstances to the welfare of the community.

The principal measures having been adopted to which your immediate attention required to be drawn, I think it necessary to direct the Council to be prorogued.

Govt. House, Montreal, 5th May, 1838.

A meeting* of the citizens of Quebec was held on Thursday afternoon at the Quebec Exchange, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of addressing their Excellencies Sir John Colborne & the Earl of Durham on the respective arrival of these personages in this city—the former from Montreal, and the latter from England, to assume the Government of this Province, invested with extraordinary powers. Notwithstanding the expected landing of the Guards we were happy to see a very numerous and respectable assemblage. At about half-past three o'clock William Walker, Esq. in obedience to the wishes of the meeting, took the Chair; Wm. Stevenson, Esq. acted as Secretary.

The Chairman having read the requisition calling the meeting, as it has been published in the newspapers made some observations thereon.

John Jones, jr. Esq. seconded by Dr. Fisher, moved:—

1.—Resolved, That next to the favor of Divine Providence, the people of this Province are mainly indebted to the promptitude and military skill of his Excellency Sir John Colborne, commander of her Majesty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada, and now Administrator of the Government in the Lower Provinces, for the early suppression of the late insurrection, and for the security of the lives and properties of her Majesty's loyal subjects therein.

This resolution was carried by acclamation.

Thos. Froste, Esq., seconded by Wm. Atkinson, Esq., moved to resolve:—

2.—Resolved, That on the occasion of his Excellency's visit to the seat of Government, it is highly expedient that a respectful and congratulatory Address should be presented to Sir John Colborne, on the part of the loyal inhabitants of this City and the vicinity, in testimony of their sense of his high character and eminent public services.

Passed as above.

J. B. Forsyth, Esq., seconded by Leaycraft, Esq., moved to resolve:—

3.—Resolved, That inasmuch as Her Majesty has been pleased to appoint to the Government of Her British North American possessions, a Nobleman of high rank and distinguished attainments, who is more especially charged with the eventual re-establishment of the Government of this Province, upon such a basis as may secure the liberties and promote the interests of all Her Majesty's loyal subjects therein—it becomes the duty of the loyal inhabitants of this City and the vicinity to present a respectful and congratulatory address to the Earl of Durham, on his arrival at the seat of Government, expressing full confidence in His Excellency's fitness for the high trust reposed in him by Her Majesty, and their firm reliance that the extraordinary powers with which he is invested, will be exerted for the permanent welfare and real interests of the Provinces over which he has been called to preside and of this Province of Lower Canada in particular.

R. H. Gairdner, Esq. seconded by Thos. Wm. Lloyd, Esq. moved in amendment:—

That it is advisable to present a respectful address to His Excellency the Earl of Durham, on his arrival at the seat of Government, containing a succinct statement of the grievances which peculiarly press upon Her Majesty's subjects of British and Irish origin, and expressing their hope that His Excellency will be pleased to take the same into consideration, and to adopt such measures as may lead to their final redress.

On a discussion, this amendment was carried by an overwhelming majority.

John Young, Esq. seconded by H. J. Nead, Esq. moved that a Committee of twenty one be appointed to draw up the Address to Sir John Colborne, and that the Executive Committee of the Constitutional Association be requested to prepare the Address to Lord Durham and that the following do compose the first Committee:—

William Walker,	Noah Freer,
William Phillips,	J. M. Fraser,
J. C. Fisher,	Alex. Simpson,
Wm. Atkinson,	Wm. Patton,
James B. Forsyth,	John McLeod,
J. Leaycraft,	John Jones, Junr.
David Burnet,	Wm. Newton,
John Bonner,	H. Gowen,
Thomas Froste,	C. McCallum,
John Munn,	Wm. Stevenson, Esqrs.
H. J. Caldwell, Esqrs.

Passed unanimously.

Wm. Walker, Esq. having left the chair John Jones, Junr. Esq. took it; a vote of thanks to the Chairman and Secretary was then carried by acclamation.

The meeting was addressed, at length, by a number of gentlemen.

London Correspondence of the Quebec Gazette.

April 9th 1838.

I should not have written you by the Wellington, had I not thought that recent events connected with the negotiations between the British American Land Company and Her Majesty's Government are of considerable importance to the Colonists in Lower Canada. In my last I informed you that the proprietary in general meeting assembled, were highly displeased with the Colonial Secretary, in not allowing them their request to have the payment of interest and instalments suspended for five years. Lord Glenelg would then only assent to a postponement for one year. A special meeting was however held on Friday, at which the proprietors called upon ministers as a matter of justice (the revolt in the Colony and the consequent indisposition of parties to emigrate to the lands of the Company, independently of other circumstances which will readily recur to the minds of your readers, must have retarded the operations of the establishment) to accede to the terms asked. Mr. Bruyere, the Secretary, has since, by invitation, had an interview with Lord Glenelg, & has received such intimation of the intentions of Her Majesty's Government, that must be of great interest to the loyal and well disposed subjects of the Mother Country in Lower Canada.

Lord Glenelg proposes to allow to the Company a suspension of all payments for one year. To allow all the remainder of the capital of the Company (£22 per share) to be expended in the promotion of emigration to the Lower Province. Her Majesty's Ministers, as I understand, are also to encourage settlers to proceed to the Lower Province in great numbers, with the view of rapidly augmenting the British and Irish population in the Colony; thus rendering the Lower Province in point of numbers, at no distant day essentially of British origin, and other measures are to be adopted to effect the same object.

This is the outline of the intentions of our Government, but they have not yet been officially communicated. You may rely however upon the general correctness of the facts I have stated.

TEXAS.—The committee on foreign relations, in the Senate of Texas, has reported a resolution instructing the President to withdraw respectfully and unconditionally, the proposition submitted to the government of the United States for the annexation of Texas to the Union.

The following is the resolution, as reported by the committee:

The committee on foreign relations, having had under consideration the situation of the question of annexation, as it now exists between this government and the government of the United States, deem it proper to submit the following preamble and resolution to the consideration of the Senate.

Whereas, the proposition which has been made by the government of Texas, for annexation to the confederacy of the United States of America, has been met by that government with views and propositions very discouraging presenting obstacles and difficulties at present insurmountable, and involving the consequent postponement of any action on the subject on its part to a period to be determined by future contingencies—thus leaving the people of Texas exposed in the meanwhile to all the trials incident to their infant condition; and whereas, a great and unhappy excitement is now prevailing among the people of the United States on the subject of slavery, which appears to be partially kept up by the proposition referred to—a result not anticipated from a cause so innocent—therefore,

Be it resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Republic of Texas, in Congress assembled, that the President be, and he is hereby instructed, to cause the proposition heretofore made by this government to the government of the United States, for the annexation of Texas, to be respectfully and unconditionally withdrawn, and thus in the most decisive manner, refer the people of Texas, for all the future good they may hope to receive or enjoy, of social security, to their own independent and manly energies.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your committee, with the hope of its speedy passage into a law.

S. H. EVERITT, Chairman.

The report and resolution were read and laid on the table.

Letters received at New Orleans on the 27th of April, say that the report of the committee was adopted in the Senate, and would doubtless be adopted in the House also. It was reported at Houston that a principal cause of the resolution was the receipt of a letter from the Texian minister to England, announcing the conclusion of a commercial treaty with that power.

The annual communication to Congress at the opening of the session on the 9th of April, was made by Mr. Lamar, president of the Senate, President Houston being prevented by severe indisposition from performing that duty. The message or address presents nothing of interest but has the merit of brevity.

About one o'clock yesterday the 15th regiment embarked on board the Canada on their route to Chambly and St. Johns. The weather being warm the men were dressed in their summer clothing and preceded by the band of the Regiment marched down to the boat in fine style. Few Regiments have remained so long in the country as the 15th has done, often scattered at outposts and in small detachments and yet preserved so excellent a state of discipline. Their appearance as they marched down to embark was that of a corps newly landed rather than of one which had completed the term, under ordinary circumstances, assigned for service in the Colonies.—Quebec Mercury, 12th inst.

THE QUANDARY.

It is hard for a man to lose his character after trying to do his best. The 'Standard' came to the house, the same day it was printed; and, as on former occasions, it was read, not now close to the fireside, but in the front room, at the window. The 'Introduction' was read, and criticised; & what would you think? a Lady, who is my particular friend, made free to pronounce it a hotch potch, adding that the author was really in a quandary. All this I had to swallow with the best grace I could assume. For I cannot bring myself to be indifferent to the approbation or disapprobation of my dear readers. When they censure, I am sure there is cause; and I set about to discover it, that I may endeavor to amend. At present I beg my dear readers to remember that I have promised nothing, and that therefore to feel disappointed is not quite fair. One of the best of Poets has ingeniously confessed,

They best can judge a poet's worth
Who oft themselves have known
The pangs of a poetic birth
By labors of their own.

What an admirable hit to the critics who have not tried their own hands! There may, perhaps, be some mystery in the 'pangs' and pleasures of the fact which humble prosers know nothing of; but, nevertheless, if unflinching critics were, before they undertook to condemn, to sit down and give a specimen of their talents, in which faults were avoided, and our productions surpassed, they might be led to pause for some moments, before they pronounced the 'pangs' of our prosaic 'birth' as a hotch potch. A friendly gentleman says that, as the word hotch potch means in cookery, an excellent dish composed of several savoury ingredients, it was intended as a high compliment. That may be, but the word does not sound well. Words, however, are subject to wonderful changes. Whether the word in question can be made to sound well to the prejudiced ear, I know not, but words of a very indifferent character, have been enrolled, and a cut of beef has been knighted. Who does not rejoice at the sight of Sir Loin, smoking on the table? The humble garter, sometimes made of a green tape, sometimes of any kind of string, has been made the badge and decoration of the noblest order of knighthood in Europe, in which kings and princes and heroes are proud to be enrolled. I could relate the origin of the order, but if my readers have any curiosity on the subject, I refer them to the reign of Edward III. in the history of England.

Dr. Samuel Johnson, a luminary among the learned sons of England, when preparing to commence the writing of his celebrated Essays, was sadly puzzled for an appropriate title, till at last, when he could get nothing to suit his fancy, adopted 'The Rambler.' Thus, in a fit of chagrin, a word of no very dignified pretensions came to be the title of a work which extended to four volumes, and which will be regarded as master-pieces of composition, profound wisdom and learning as long as the English language will continue to be read and known. The same great genius adopted, 'The Idler,' as the title of another work, not equal, perhaps, to the Rambler, but still worthy of Johnson. Steele, and his associates, were content to issue the productions of their wit, under the title of 'Tattler.' Addison, the sweetest, the most elegant of all his contemporaries, published his volumes under the title of 'Spectator'—a work which never has yet been surpassed in the qualities which constitute, & the graces which adorn the most natural, purest, & most agreeable style of composition in the English language. Here, we have the 'Rambler,' the 'Idler,' the 'Tattler,' and the 'Spectator,' words which naturally convey the idea, first, of one strolling about as whim, caprice, or curiosity directs, for his own pleasure;—of a second, who is good for nothing but to eat and to drink, and to wear his clothes, if he can procure any to wear;—of a third, whose tongue blabs every thing he hears, together with a great deal that he never heard;—and of a fourth, who is a dumb, stupid witness where any thing is to be gazed at. Good company, however, and distinguished employment, have raised these words from their low origin, to eminent stations, from which they cannot again be degraded.

I might now allude to a class of most beautiful words that have had the misfortune of being totally ruined by bad company, but I forbear. The subject is not agreeable. The fine gold is changed. Satan was an angel of light, before he turned rebel against God. Bad men call their wicked designs by names which not only sound beautifully, but are also the literal representations of useful and splendid virtues. But good words, when employed to gild and varnish evil designs, and wicked works, are notwithstanding, the dignity of their origin, totally degraded. The serpent is a beautiful reptile, but the delicate tints of his glossy stripes can never render the hiss which proceeds from his forked tongue and venomous mouth, agreeable to the ear. He was once more 'subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made,' but he employed his beauty and his wit to destroy happiness, and is, therefore, degraded and cursed. Evil communications corrupt good manners.' J. R.

MISSISSKOU STANDARD.

FRELIGHTSBURG, MAY 22, 1838.

The circumstances in which the country at this moment is placed, are certainly singular. After having been in the possession of a free constitution for a period of nearly fifty years, it is all at once thrown under a system of rule as absolute in its character as it is, perhaps, necessary for its safety.

There is no form of government more entirely foreign to the minds and feelings of Britons, than the one under which we at present live. The welfare of the country, however, has rendered it necessary; and we are bound to submit, because we believe it to be the only form by which the Colony can be ruled, until the minds of men again become settled. Yet, although we are ready to avow this conviction, we find it impossible to shake from us the natural repugnance against it. It is only by extreme caution, and by an exact measure of justice to all parts of the country, in the selection of Special Councillors, that the minds of the people can be brought to acquiesce cheerfully in the measures of the Governor for ruling the country.

Since the number of Councillors is unlimited, we think, that even handed justice should be shown in their selection. They ought to be men from different sections of the Provinces; and if possible, men who have already been tried in public life. Partiality towards men, or towards localities, will most certainly breed distrust in the minds of the neglected.

That this has been the case, to some extent already, we are sorry to say is true; for, under all the circumstances, the people of this portion of the Townships, have felt themselves neglected, that not one has been chosen from Mississkoui, as a member of the Council. Neither is it without reason that they complain. They have proved themselves as loyal as the people of any portion of the Province; they have shewn themselves as zealous for maintaining the integrity of the Empire, as ready to risk their lives in quelling the rebellion as any portion of her Majesty's subjects. The frontier Townships,—and one half of Mississkoui is on the frontier,—have incurred more risk than any portion of the province South of the St. Lawrence; but this consideration we should not have mentioned, were it not that, according to the conciliatory system, it forms a good reason for conciliating the frontier inhabitants. Instead of being allowed their share, of influence in the dark communings of a body whose ordinances, formed in secret, are for the government of a province, they find themselves totally excluded.

Had the Eastern Townships been but half represented in the Council, the people might have had less cause for complaint; but when only three are called as the representatives of a country, equal in extent to a kingdom, & when the cities appear to have assigned to them a greater number than they are justly entitled to, the people in this part of the country think themselves rather unfairly dealt with. Allowances must, of course, be made for the times in which the members were named, and the peculiar circumstances in which the wealthy and revered Administrator of the Government was placed; but ere the Council be again assembled, we hope that the cause of dissatisfaction will be removed.

The following notice appears among the latest news from England:—

House of Lords, April 10.—CANADA.—Lord Glenelg presented a petition from the British and Irish population of Lower Canada, expressive of the deep regret at the late disturbances in the province. The petitioners expressed their sense of the grievances to which the population were exposed in consequence of the convention of 1791. Among other matters on which the petitioners gave an opinion, was the union of the two provinces. He (Lord G.) had on a former occasion alluded to this subject, but he felt that it would be premature for him to express an opinion on it at present. This much, however, he might say, that he thought if such a measure were proposed it could only be done with the approbation of the two provinces themselves. The Noble Lord presented a petition to the same effect from Quebec.

The subject of the Union of the Provinces, is one involving the greatest interests of Lower Canada, & not of Lower Canada only, but of the empire at large. The minds of the Anglo-Saxon population of this province, however varying on matters of general politics, have at length become settled on this point, that the reunion of the provinces is now the only stay of Anglo-Saxon liberty here, and the only means of retaining the North American colonies as dependencies of the British Crown.

It is not without regret, that we confess our belief, that this is now the only measure for effecting those great objects; for we have long clung to the impression, that a firm administration of colonial affairs, upon the broad principles of justice and of true patriotism, would be sufficient to keep Lower Canada in the right path, under the constitution of 1791. If it were possible that the ministers of the Crown for the time being, whether Tory or Whig we care not, could have nerve enough to act as impartial judges according to law and evidence only, & not as partisan politicians, from the peculiar ideas and tenets of their class, we think that this colony might after a short time emerge from the present darkness, and be again conducted in the straight course, according to the old landmarks. But we must take men as they are, and we fear, that, if matters are placed on the old footing, we shall have more unjust demands and more foolish concession, more heart-burnings and more conciliation, followed in the course of fifteen or twenty years, by another rebellion, probably a war of extermination, and, whichever population gain the ascendancy, a total loss to the empire of the North American provinces.

When we hear such a man as Lord Aberdeen, express himself in favor of casting us loose, while a rebellion was yet raging in the country; when we see such lamentable ignorance of our affairs displayed in England, by those who profess to be instructors of the people, and such carelessness as to our safety and our liberties exhibited by the Government, we cannot reconcile to ourselves the thoughts of again being subjected to the will of an insane French Assembly, if a remedy can by any means be provided. That remedy consists in Anglifying the province, as the constitutional papers call it.

But, in the mean time, we must stop; we may mention, however, that, in bringing about this desirable end, we are totally opposed to the using of violent measures. In a future paper we will attempt to shew the necessity of effecting it at some period, and that the speedy union of the provinces is the best means that can be adopted.

Three ships of the line, one frigate and two sloops of war have arrived at Quebec with troops.

Lord Durham was to leave Portsmouth for Canada on the 21st April. He is daily expected at Quebec.

We take pleasure in laying before our readers the two following despatches from Major Williams to Capt. Starke. One of them will be found to be similar to that in the Standard of last week, addressed to capt. O. J. Kemp.

PHILIPSBURG, 5th May, 1838.

SIR,—I am directed by his Excellency the Commander of the Forces, to transmit to you the accompanying extract of a despatch from the Secretary of State for the colonies, dated the 28th January, 1838, conveying her Majesty's thanks to yourself and the officers and men under your command, for their gallant conduct in repelling the attack made last December into this territory, by insurgents from the United States.

In performing this duty, I feel that, to secure at all times, and under all circumstances, a continuance of the same loyal and gallant conduct which distinguished the Militia and Volunteers of this District, in the above occasion, there can be no higher incentive than the gracious approbation of a Queen, whose first and most ardent desire is, the peace, the happiness, and the prosperity of her subjects.

EXTRACT.

'Lord Hill has communicated to me your despatches of the 13th and 22d of December, reporting the defeat of the insurgents, who had entered Lower Canada from Swanton in the State of Vermont. I have laid these despatches before the Queen, and am commanded by her Majesty to convey through you, to the Mississkoui Volunteers, her Majesty's thanks for their conduct on the occasion to which you have referred.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,
W. WILLIAMS.

PHILIPSBURG, 11th May, 1838.

SIR,—I am directed by his Excellency the Commander of the Forces, to transmit the accompanying extract of a letter from the Secretary of State for the colonies, dated the 26th February, 1838, expressing the high sense entertained by her Majesty's Government of the services rendered by the Militia and other loyal Volunteers of this Province; and in fulfilling this pleasing duty, I sincerely congratulate the Corps of the Mississkoui District, on having well merited this distinguished mark of approbation.

EXTRACT.

"I have the honor to transmit to you herewith, a copy of a letter from the Secretary to the Lords commissioners of the Treasury, suggesting considerations which render it expedient that the Volunteer corps, which, in the late emergency, have cheerfully afforded their assistance to her Majesty, in Upper & Lower Canada, shall be released as soon as possible, from all military service.

'I entirely concur with the Lords of the Treasury, in the view which they have taken of this subject, and I trust that the present state of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, combined with the increase which has already taken place in the amount of the Regular Military Force in Lower Canada, and the certainty of additional reinforcements arriving at an early period, will enable you to act on this suggestion.

'In conveying to you this intimation I avail myself of the opportunity of again expressing the sense entertained by her Majesty's Government of the zeal and gallantry with which regardless of considerations of personal danger or inconvenience, the members of these corps have come forward in aid of her Majesty's Troops for the suppression of the late insurrectionary movements, and the maintenance of the integrity of the empire.'

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant,
W. WILLIAMS,
Major unattached.

MUSIC.
The trumpet-clang and beat of drums
Announce the course of Mars;
And warriors bold, with swords and plumes,
All hasten to the wars.
On Summer eve, the shepherd's reed
Breathes forth a mellow sound;
And children sing along the mead,
And lovers dance around:
The rich piano's magic swell,
Awakes the echoing hall,
And gallants toast the skillful belle,
Charm of the festival.
The organ's tones with woman's voice,
Break forth in solemn praise;
Angels that bear the sound rejoice,
And join the holy lays.
But in the humble christian's heart,
A still small voice is heard;
Sweeter than instruments impart,
To angel hymns preferred.
It is the Spirit's soothing breath—
It tells of endless peace;
It whispers in the ear of death,
And all his terrors cease.

AGRICULTURAL.

Preserve your best Animals for Breeding.

The complaint is general, at least throughout the eastern states, that the stock of neat cattle has been greatly diminished within a few years, and that prices have consequently advanced to an unprecedented pitch. And it is believed to be a general fault among farmers, that they sell their best young animals to the butchers. The season has arrived when it becomes the farmer to improve his practice in these matters. He should preserve his best animals for breeding; raise more stock, if his farm will permit, and substitute improved breeds, or at all events cross upon them.

He should preserve his best individuals for breeding. For a dollar or two extra the farmer sells his best calf to the butcher; which, if kept as a breeder, would not only serve to improve his whole stock, but the individual thus sacrificed for a dollar or two, would in many cases, be worth at the working or milking age, and with no extra expense of keep, ten, twenty, or fifty dollars more, than the poor calf rejected by the butcher, and which consequently serves as a breeder upon the farm, still further to depreciate the character of the farm stock. The farmer who breeds from poor or inferior animals, in a manner throws away capital. He who breeds only from select animals gets common interest. And he who breeds from select animals, of the choice breeds, gets compound interest. Choice working oxen, of four or five years old of common stock, or with the Devon cross, have recently been sold for one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars the pair. This surely affords a handsome remuneration to the breeder. There is generally a difference of about one-half, in cows and oxen, between select and inferior individuals of the common breeds.

He should raise more stock.—Many of our farmers have been 'penny wise and pound foolish,' in destroying calves at their birth, in order to turn a few gallons of milk into ready money, thus retarding the increase, & enhancing the dairy stock. Cattle are the source of fertility to the farm. dung makes fat crops, and fat crops make fat cattle. In districts remote from market where land is cheap, the rearing of neat cattle should certainly be a profitable business. It is so upon well managed farms, in the contiguity of markets, where lands are high. It may be made still more so at remote points, where lands are comparatively low, particularly if select breeds, or select individuals, are employed as breeders. But,

He should select the breeds best adapted to his farm; and we refer to the report upon neat cattle in our extra sheet, for advice, as to the breed which is best adapted to his farm. Having determined upon this, let him stick to it, preserve his finest animals to propagate from; make it his business to improve, and he will soon find, that instead of ten and twelve dollars, his yearlings and two year olds will bring him twenty, fifty, and even a hundred and fifty dollars each. nay, the last summer has demonstrated, that choice animals, of improved breeds, will bring 1,500 to 2,100 dollars sometimes. —Cultivator.

Transplanting—Potatoes—Italian Wheat—Ploughing old Meadows.

Clinton, Oneida co. Jan 5th, 1838.

Mr. BUEL, Sir, As the earth is composed of atoms, and the ocean of drops, so the columns of the Cultivator may, perhaps receive an accession of interest from sources comparatively small. A few brief remarks are all I propose to offer.

1st. With respect to transplanting. In the early part of December, 1836, I procured a lot of apple trees, and set them the next day, (roots partially froze during the night); the ground being naked and clear of frost. The next season witnessed a fine blossom in every instance; numbers of them blossomed, and one bore about a dozen apples to maturity. The suggestion I would make is, that late fall, or winter setting when practised is preferable to performing that operation in the spring, as the earth becomes adjusted to the roots by the long action of winter, being thereby less exposed to perish by drought or other causes.

2d. As much difference of opinion exists, whether large, small or medium size potatoes are best for seed, I made a trial of the two extremes in the following manner, viz. planting two rows with one potato of the largest size in each hill, placed in a triangular form, four inches apart, soil similar and very rich. Result...the potatoes from the first two rows were generally larger than those from the other two, (though all were large, and the yield about one-sixth greater.) As truth is said to lie between extremes, as a general rule, perhaps this is not an exception.

3d. Italian wheat. My experience here is limited, having raised but a single patch of forty eight rods, from which I obtained eight and three fourths bushels, being at the rate of twenty-nine bushels per acre. The crop was diminished by smut, the straw bright and grain heavy, weighing more than 61 pounds to the bushel. I beg leave here to suggest the importance of making all statements of crops for publication, from actual measurement, both of land and product. The superiority of this variety of spring wheat is thought by many to consist chiefly in its adaptation to worn out or light soils. My field had been in tillage forty years, with, perhaps, one exception. As far as my observation extended the past season, the growth was abundant, very little injured by rust, and I am not at present willing to abandon its culture. If on further trial some other species shall be found preferable, of course they will supersede it, as improvement is or ought to be the object of every farmer.

4th. In conclusion, I would reiterate your oft repeated recommendation, to plough up old worn-out meadows, and keep them in tillage two or three seasons. My own experience, though not great, enables me to say that on a piece of meadow thus renovated, I have for several years cut triple the amount of its former product.

I am, sir, with respect, yours, &c,
G. BUTLER.

Relative Value of Ruta Baga for Fattening Oxen.

Scaghticoke, Feb. 3, 1838.

SIR,—Believing the turnip culture to be of almost inestimable value to the farmers of this country, and knowing the strong prejudices entertained by most of them, against any thing like innovations, or deviations from the good old ways of their fathers, as they term them, I deem it the duty of the few who have been credulous enough to cultivate a few acres, to say what they can from experience, to induce others to give them a fair trial, and a chance to grow upon a few acres, of their poor sandy soil, that will hardly grow any thing else, and they will find, when the summer is passed, and the harvest ended, that they have not been imposed upon, except by the large quantity of roots. And, it was my object in commencing this article, to show what I believe to be their value, for feeding, in comparison with other grains and Roots, generally used. I will first state that my crop was about 950 bushels per acre, on a light sandy soil, without manure, ploughed but once, and hoed twice, the whole expense, including interest of land, was less than 3 cts. per bushel, a price which I have frequently paid for digging potatoes, and the same land would have produced 200 bushels. I fed 2 yoke of cattle on them for 2 months, viz: November and December, feed 5 bushel per day, a yoke. Average gain 115 lbs. a yoke per month. The same cattle were fed through the month of January on potatoes and meal, corn and oats, ground together in equal quantities, feed 2 bushels potatoes, 1 bushel meal. Gain 60 lbs. Estimate the value of the ruta бага, by the present price of corn, oats and potatoes, and the respective gains, and it makes the ruta бага worth but a fraction less than 48 cts. per bushel; that is, if corn is worth 8s., oats 4s., potatoes 2s., for making beef, we must put the ruta бага at 43 cts. I will only add that the experiment was fairly tried, the cattle were weighed correctly, and eat their allowance every day.

Yours, respectfully,
JOHN C. MATHER.

TO PRINTERS.

WHITE & W. HAGAR, respectfully inform the printers of the United States, to whom they have been individually known as established Letter Founders that they have formed a copartnership in said business, and from their united skill and extensive experience, they hope to be able to give satisfaction to all who may favor them with their orders.
The introduction of machinery in the place of the tedious & unhealthy process of casting type by hand, a desideratum by the European founders, was by American ingenuity, and a heavy expenditure of time and money on the part of our senior partner, first successfully accomplished. Extensive use of the machine cast letter has fully tested, and established its superiority in every particular over those cast by the old process.
The letter Foundry will hereafter be carried on by the parties before named under the firm of White, Hagar & Co. Their specimen exhibits a complete series, from Diamond to Sixty-four lines Pica. The book a new type being in the most modern light and style.

White, Hagar & Co., are agents for the sale of Smith and Rust Printing presses, which they can furnish their customers at manufacturer's prices. Chases, Cases, Composing Sticks, Ink and every article in the printing business, kept for sale and furnished on short notice. Old type taken in exchange for new at 9 cents per pound.
N. B. Newspaper proprietors who will give the above three insertions, will be entitled to five dollars in such articles as they may select from our specimen.

A New Work!

On the first of July, 1837, will be published, beautifully printed on good paper, of an extra large royal size, & neatly stitched in a colored cover, the first number of a new periodical work entitled

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.

Edited by

WILLIAM E. BURTON,

To whom all original Communications will be Addressed.

The announcement of a new Periodical, in the present state of affairs, may create some feeling of surprise, but having contemplated an alteration in the nature of a very popular monthly publication, 'Every Body's Album,' the proprietors deem it best to proceed in the perfected arrangements, and produce a periodical embodying the most wholesome points of the old work, but conducted with sufficient energy and talent to ensure the success of their new arrangements. The respectable and extensive subscription list of the Album, to which this work is designed as a successor will at once place the Gentleman's Magazine in a circulation at once equal to that of any other monthly work in the United States, and guarantee the continuance of its publication, with the certainty of payment to the enterprise of the proprietors.

The contents of the Gentleman's Magazine will, in every respect be answerable to the meaning of the title. We do not pretend, in our literary pursuits, to fly as 'eagles soar,' above the ken of man; nor shall we be content with merely skimming the surface of the ground; our pages will not be filled with abstruse predilections nor shall we display the brilliancy of our critical acumen in matters 'caviare to the milton.' In short we do not mean to be profoundly learned, nor philosophically deep. We wish to produce a gentlemanly, agreeable book—an epitome of life's adjuncts—a literary melange, possessing variety to suit all palates and sufficient interest to command a place upon the parlor table of every gentleman in the United States.

In the varied and ample page of contents attached to each number of the Gentleman's Magazine, original articles will be found from some of the most celebrated writers of the day—essays humorous and didactic—graphic delineations of men and manners—free and spirited translation of the lighter portions of the Literature of continental Europe. A series original biographical notices of the principal stars in the Dramatic hemisphere. The current Literature will be reviewed in full, and liberal extracts made from rare and valuable works. An original copy right song, not otherwise to be obtained, will be given, with the music, in every number.

The Gentleman's Magazine will contain seventy-two extra sized octavo pages, of two columns each, forming at the close of the year, two large handsome volumes of one thousand seven hundred and twenty-eight columns, each column containing one-third more than an octavo page of average proportions. Several engravings will be given in the course of the year; and the proprietors pledge themselves that the Gentleman's Magazine shall be THE LARGEST AND THE CHEAPEST MONTHLY WORK ISSUED IN THE U. STATES.

To induce subscribers to forward their names immediately, the publisher begs leave to offer the following inducements for Clubbing, the advantages of which proposition can remain in force for a few months only. The subscription to the Gentleman's Magazine, will, for a single copy, be invariably three dollars per annum payable in advance...but a five dollar bill will produce two copies to the same direction, or a club of ten dollars will command five copies.

All letters, postage paid, addressed to Charles Alexander, Athenian Buildings, Franklin Place, Philadelphia, will meet the earliest attention.

Editors occasionally inserting this prospectus & forwarding a marked paper, will be entitled to an exchange.

On issuing the proposals for a new volume of the Rural Repository, the publisher tenders his most sincere acknowledgments to all contributors, Agents and Subscribers, for the liberal support which they have offered him from the commencement of his publication. New assurances on the part of the publisher of a periodical which has stood the test of years, would seem superfluous, he will therefore only say, that it will be conducted on a similar plan, and published in the same form as heretofore, and no pains or expense shall be spared to promote their gratification by its further improvement in typographical execution and original and selected matter.

WALDIE'S LITERARY OMNIBUS.

Novel and important Literary Enterprise. Novels, Tales, Biography, Voyages, Travels, Reviews, and the News of the Day.

It was one of the great objects of 'Waldie's Library,' to make good reading cheaper, and to bring literature to every man's door. That object has been accomplished; we have given to books wings, and they have flown to the uttermost parts of our vast continent, carrying society to the secluded, occupation to the literary, information to all. We now propose still further to reduce prices, and render the access to a literary banquet more than twofold accessible; we gave and shall continue to give in the quarto library a volume weekly for two cents a day; we now propose to give a volume in the same period for less than four cents a week, and to add as a piquant seasoning to the dish a few columns of shorter literary matters and a summary of the news and events of the day. We know by experience and calculation that we can go still further in the matter of reduction, and we feel that there is still very enough for us to aim at offering to an increasing literary appetite that mental food which it craves.

The Select Circulating Library, now as ever so great a favourite, will continue to make its weekly visits, and to be issued in a form for binding and preservation, and its price and form will remain the same. But we shall, in the first week of January, 1837, issue a large sheet of the size of the largest newspapers of America, but on the very superior paper, also filled with books of the newest and most entertaining, though in their several departments of Novels, Tales, Voyages, Travels, &c., select in their character, joined with reading such as usually should fill a weekly newspaper. By this method we hope to accomplish a great good; to enlighten and enlighten the family circle, and to give to it, at an expense which shall be no consideration to any, a mass of reading that in book form would alarm the pockets of the prudent, and to do it in a manner that the most sceptical shall acknowledge 'the power of concentration can no farther go.' No book which appears in 'Waldie's Quarto Library' will be published in the Omnibus which will be an entirely distinct periodical.

TERMS.

WALDIE'S LITERARY OMNIBUS will be issued every Friday morning, printed on paper of a quality superior to any other weekly sheet, and of the largest size. It is sold at

1st. Books, the newest and the best that can be procured, equal every week to a London duodecimo volume, embracing Novels, Travels, Memoirs, &c. and only chargeable with newspaper paper age.

2d. Literary Reviews, Tales, Sketches, notices of books, and information from 'the world of letters,' of every description.

3d. The news of the week concentrated to a small compass, but in sufficient detail to embrace a knowledge of the principal events political and miscellaneous, of Europe and America. The price will be two dollars to clubs of five subscribers where the paper is forwarded to one address. To clubs of two individuals, five dollars; to single mail subscribers, three dollars. The discount on uncurrent money will be charged to the remitter; the low price issued, and superior paper absolutely prohibiting paying a discount.

On no condition will a copy ever be sent until the payment is received in advance.

As the arrangements for the prosecution of this great literary undertaking are all made, and the proprietor has redeemed all his pledges to a generous public for many years, no fear of the non-fulfilment of the contract can be felt. The Omnibus will be regularly issued, and will contain in a year reading matter equal in amount to two volumes of Rees's Cyclopaedia, for the small sum mentioned above.
